Personal Philosophy

Music is an indispensable subject taught in public schools. It nourishes the growth of the holistic child; teaching them a wide array of necessary concepts and skills, including: Culture, Citizenship, Artistic Expression, and Life and Social skills. Music can also be used to strengthen and support other Academic subjects such as; English, History, Math and Science. The subject of music is unique in that it can be used in different ways to teach literally anything. Everything from life skills or concepts such as good posture, responsibility, punctuality, perseverance, and hard work to academic subjects and motor skills can be taught through or enhanced by music.

A wide variety of music classes, options and experiences increases the size and scope of what students can learn through music. Preferably an assortment of classes would be offered in schools to meet the diverse needs of the greatest number of students. In all of my classes, I will strive to provide an accepting and supportive learning environment that encourages personal growth, creativity and uniqueness in all students.

My hope is to create a network that fosters the growth of confident individuals and productive citizens, preparing students for their individual futures in this technological, global community. Music alone has the unique ability to be anything and everything for those who study and grow to appreciate it.
